

An aerial photograph of a city street intersection. In the foreground, a large, triangular traffic island is covered with numerous yellow and white striped bollards. The street is paved with asphalt and has white lane markings. On the right side of the street, there are several buildings. One building has a red awning over its entrance, and another has a blue awning. A sign on one of the buildings reads "ORIGINS". There are trees and greenery along the sidewalks, and a few people can be seen walking. The overall scene is a busy urban environment.

If you receive a parking ticket from the City of New Haven, it is advisable to take action quickly if you would like to dispute the ticket. Otherwise, you should make payment as soon as possible because the fine will increase over time.

There are four ways to pay a parking ticket in New Haven:
