If you are feeling anxious, distracted or stressed it is always helpful to talk to others:

- Yale students and benefits eligible employees should consider talking with a clinician. It’s completely confidential. You can contact Yale Mental Health and Counseling.
- Even if you do not identify with a religion, the Yale Chaplain’s Office is a comfortable environment representing a variety of traditions and viewpoints. All university chaplains are trained in pastoral care and welcome the opportunity to help all members of the Yale community talk through the issues. Virtual appointments are available.
- Being Well at Yale engages community members in activities that are geared towards easing stress and finding support through meditation or movement activities.
- As always, the staff at OISS are here to hear concerns and to direct students, scholars and family members to the best resources. You can contact your adviser here or reach out to our director or associate director.
