Navigating Immigration: Entrepreneurship for Current Students

October 9, 2023

If you are an international student with an interest in starting a business but wonder whether you can start such a venture with your current immigration status or how the process might affect your future presence in the U.S., this talk is for you.

International entrepreneurs indeed face several hurdles when seeking to start a business in the United States. Attorney Dan Berger [1] will demystify the immigration options available to international entrepreneurs, as well as provide insight into how international entrepreneurs should structure their companies to give themselves the best chance at a secure future in the United States.

This event is free and open to the Yale community, but registration is required. During registration, please submit your questions about self-employment, start-ups, and issues related to entrepreneurship projects.
