Visa, Immigration Status, and Entry Stamp

What is a Visa?

A visa, or visa stamp, is a physical stamp or sticker in your passport that is issued by a U.S. embassy or consulate outside of the U.S. It indicates that you are eligible to apply for entry to the U.S. in a specific immigration category such as J-1 or H-1B scholar. Please note that Canadian citizens are not required to have a U.S. visa,[1] but are required to have all other documentation.

See the U.S. Bureau of Consular Affairs website [2] for more information about different U.S. visas.

What is Immigration Status?

The maintenance of immigration status refers to the responsibilities that an individual has while in the U.S. These will differ according to your visa type. Immigration status also represents your legal permission to remain in the U.S. under specific conditions as defined by an immigration document:

- J-1 scholars have a Form DS-2019
- H-1B scholars have a Form I-797

In most cases, the immigration document is (or will be extended to be) valid for a longer period than the visa.
What is an Entry Stamp?

Upon entering the U.S. a Customs and Border Protection (CBP) official will:

1. Review your immigration document, visa, and other documents
2. Authorize your status in the I-94 system
3. Put an ink entry stamp in the passport

The I-94 record includes the length of time you may remain inside the U.S. Scholars should always print their I-94 record [3] so that they have evidence of their immigration status.

What Does 'D/S' Mean?

F-1 and J-1 visa holders will see the notation 'D/S' on their entry stamp and their I-94. D/S stands for 'duration of status' and refers back to the expiration date on the immigration document. When your status is D/S you can stay in the U.S. as long as your immigration document (DS-2019, I-797, etc.) is accurate and unexpired.

What If My Visa Expires While I Am in the U.S.?

A visa in your passport issued by from a U.S. consulate does not determine how long you can remain in the United States; it is only an entry document. Therefore, you may stay in the U. S. beyond the expiration date of a visa as long as you are maintaining your J-1 [5] or H-1B [6] status and the immigration document (DS-2019, I-797, etc.) remains valid.

For most international travel [7] the immigration document, passport and visa must be valid and unexpired. If the visa is expired it will be necessary to apply for a new visa, through the same process as your initial visa application, at a U.S. embassy or consulate outside the U.S.

Source URL: https://oiss.yale.edu/travel/for-scholars/visas/visa-immigration-status-and-entry-stamp

Links